When typing ourselves and others, it is vital to understand some important concepts. First is that no one type is better than any other. We think, process information and organize our lives differently than some and similar to others. What works for us may not work for others, but

▶ that does not mean our way is better or that another's way is better.

Join Andy Brown during this dynamic 3-hour seminar and learn:

What typing a person does:

- Helps foster effective communication
- Helps you reach consensus
- Helps you meet goals and objectives

What Personality Typing Does NOT Do

- Put you or anyone else into a box
- Create world peace
